OVERPLAY + NASCAR

Turning Spectators Into Players

Role: Senior Product Designer
Scope: Product Design, UX/UI, Interaction Design, User Research, Design Systems
Context: Startup / high-growth / client-facing environment
2025–2026

OVERVIEW

In 2025, Overplay partnered with NASCAR teams including Front Row Motorsports and ThorSport Racing to extend product reach beyond gaming audiences. The goal was to transform sponsorship visibility into meaningful product engagement.

THE CHALLENGE

Overplay needed mass-market visibility beyond gaming audiences. NASCAR provided reach, but visibility alone does not drive product growth. The real challenge was converting race fans from passive viewers into active participants inside the app.

- Strict NASCAR branding and sponsorship guidelines
- Tight production timelines tied to race schedules
- Maintaining consistency across physical and digital experiences

STRATEGY

From Sponsorship to Interactive Product Experience

Rather than treating NASCAR as a branding layer, the approach focused on embedding it directly into the product experience:

- Driver-based gameplay concepts
- Racing-themed gameplay templates
- Event-driven competitions
- Integrated leaderboards and performance mechanics
- Cohesive visual identity across digital and physical touchpoints

Product Design & Engagement Mechanics

- Designed competitive gameplay loops aligned with racing culture
- Introduced high-score challenges and repeatable interactions
- Reduced friction for first-time users entering the experience
- Aligned interaction patterns with user motivation (competition and progression)
- Created scalable templates to support ongoing event-based content

REFLECTION

Sponsorship creates visibility, but engagement requires product integration.
Embedding real-world context into the core experience transforms passive audiences into active participants.
